Streets and Churches Will Be Filled With Great Companies of Well-Dressed People.

APPROPRIATE MUSIC

Programmes Which Came Too Late for Yesterday's Paper Are Printed To-day

Richmond streets will be thronged this Euster Sunday probably as never before with a handsomely dressed people. Men will be smiling and unusually courteous, and chilvairous, in high hat, freck coat and light trousers; matrons benign, and stately, and maldens demurely sweet; all studiously unconscious of beautiful Easstudiously anconscious of bedutiful Easttor raiment.

Every one will go to church. Men will hear sermons to-day who have not seen inside of the sacred waits of a church for an even twelve month—to church on Easter, of course. The weather man predicts showers and cooler weather, but the sun will smile through the cloudifts and the world will be happs.

Sermons will tell the Easter story and slad music will ring in every clartch.

After church the famous Franklin Street parade will find its only successful rival for handsome women and well-dressed men in the great Easter throngs which will rurge to and from upon Fifth Avemue.

'OLD MUTUAL'S'' PROUD RECORD

"In the early days of its existence a calamitous fire occurred in Petersburg on July 16, 1815, which almost wiped the society out of existence, and would have of this society, 'the lien,' the Doric column that supports the noble superstructure.

Policyholders Should Rejoice.

instead of the being a cluste of complaint, that a surplus has been provided, every policyholder should rejoice that the society has an accumulation to stand between it and the necessity of increasing even the present very low rate of quotas."

"Is there any provision in the charter for making dividends to the powey-holders?"

"There is none. The charter of the society was granted by the Legislature of Virginia in 1794, and has been amended from time to time by various acts passed by subsequent Legislatures. The only method of making a dividend is the indirect one adopted by the society of remitting quotas and granting free insurance, as the society has done for the year 1906.

"This year each polickholder on the muttal rate, fauts, relievables, which we have the form the county of the cou ance, as the society has done for the year 1906.

"This year each policiholder on the mutual plan (such policyholders being the only members of the society) get their insurance absolutely free.

"Instead of reducing the rate, which is now so very low, ten cents on the $100. It was determined that it would be better to remit all quotas for this year, and while making no promise as to the future, the expectation and hope of the standing committee is to continue the same plan of remitting quotas for as many years as circumstances will permit."

Why the Skyscraper? Why the Skyscraper?

"What were the special reasons for erecting the skyscraper home of the socreeting the skyscraper none of the so-clety?"

"There were several reasons. Among them I will say, first, the society had a large investment in State bonds purchased around 60, and which had become worth near par. It was believed that this investment It was believed that this investment in real estate would pay at least as much, if not more, income than could be received from the State bonds; sected, it was believed that the judiciously located and erected building would, in the early future, increase in value; third, as much the larger part of the business of the society was in Richmond, it was thought wise to expend the money in this city in giving to it the most elegant office building within its limits, while beautifying and improving it; fourth, it had come to the knowledge of the standing committee that there were persons had come to the knowledge of the standing committee that there were persons who were looking with a covetous eye at the assets and control of the society, and they thought it wise and prudent to put a large amount of the society's resets in a solid and permanent investment of such a character as to be beyond, humanly speaking, the power of any future controlling interest to dissipate or misangly them.

or misapply them.
"Is any member of the standing committee or officer of the society indebted to the society?"

to the society?"

Lend No Money.

"Prior to 1820, moneys were loaned on bonds and collateral security, and some losses were made in that way, but for more than eighty years no loan of moneys has been made to any person whatsoever, and within that period no officer of the society or member of the standing committee has borrowed one cent from the society, and it would be impossible for any of them to borrow, no matter how great his security."

"Would the society fight an investigation?"

The society would have not the least

"The society would have not the least objection on earth to a full and free investigation, and as to the threatened suit, we know nothing of any cause for a suit, but the courts of this State are open to any one who feels agrieved. I am sure, however, that those in charge of the society's affairs will resist any effort on the part of any one to divert its assets from the purpose for which they have been provided; that is, from the maintenance of a fund for the protection of the policyholders in case of any great and unforeseen loss.

"There is much in the history of the society which is extremely interesting, I could tell much of interest of its early history, of its plan which was suggested scelety which is extremely interesting.

I could tell much of interest of its early history, of its plan which was suggested by Mr. William Frederick Ast, a Prussian, residing in Richmond during the end of the eighteenth century, which plan was supposed to have been modeled after a system of mutual guarantee, introduced by Frederick the Great.

"I could tell you of opinions filed in the archives of the society, given by John Marshall, the great chief justice; Edmund Randelph, John Wickham, Judge Peter V. Daniel and others distinguished in their day, and the list of members of the Standing Committee of the one hundred and twelve years of the society's existence, would disclose the names of men in each generation distinguished in the annals of this city as among its best business men as well as the highest social position."

"And now, Mr. Chairman, I want to city the city of the city the city of the city who make it their duty to depreciate the gas works. Gentlemen, the action of such people is impudence, insolence, inpertinence, pure and simple. The gas works have been profitable every year we have run them. They are our own, and we can do with the mass we like. What have these others got to do with the plant.

"We have used the plant.

"We have used the profits accruing from the gas works in improvements other than the works themselves. We have used them for the benefit of the community, and the works have in consequence run down. But, what have these depreciators got to do with the works, anythew? It's none of their business what becomes of them.

Candidates Speak.

The meeting was called to order at $20 o'clock last night with Mr. Charles I. Phillips in the chair. The attendance was very large and Monroe Hall was packed with the candidates and their constituents.

After stating that the Treasurer, Mr. James B. Pace, was absent on account of sickness, speeches were listened to from the candidates for the Common Council, who were taken in alphabetical order. Mr. C. P. Dayls said first he was opposed to the city's cither leasing or sching its gas plant. He favored the municipal ownership of its electric lighting plant, and spoke in favor of selling the Clark Spring property to Miss Arents. "I would rather give her the land than sell it to the Hollywood corporation," he declared. Mr. Dayls also spoke in opposition to the Carnegie library proposition, and said the city should see to the improvement of her docks.

Mr. John Don Leuvy being absent on account of the illness of his wife, Mr. E. W. Miner was next called upon to speak, and he said that he was opposed to the Carnegie for: that it was absurd, and certainly so in view of the financial condition of the city. Regarding the gas plant offer, he declared that if the pinnt was leased to the applicants most recent to apply for same that their was nothing in the world to prevent their unloading the on the market when they get their price without in the leased to the applicants most recent to apply for same that their was nothing in the world to prevent their unloading the will be market when they get their price without in the lease of the gas and siting down.

Mr. A. O. Boschen, the only one of the lot who does not already hold the office he is striving for, spoke and made a good impression. He opposed the lease or sale of the gas works, heing in favor of mary, but not the Carnegie library, which would draw on the city for a sum it room interpol ownership of the electric lighting plant, and deciared he favored lighting plant, and deciared he favored in light and of

F. Marion Crawford has been reporting the Vesuvius eruption for the enterprising American press. This has necessarily interfered with his literary duties to such an extent that it is doubtful if he can write a novel this week.—Rich. Times Dispatch.

We do not know who prepares the Vesuvius reports for the Associated Tress, but they are the work of a master hand-vivid, realistic and polished. They decorate and refine with the flowers of an entrancing rhetoric scenes of horror and human suffering that have few parallel in the world's history. They are examples of descriptive writing such as all may admire and But few can hope to rival. They are worthy to come from the pen of Mr. Crawford and they are a high tribute to the spirit and enterprise of the Associated Press, which is the greatest newsgathering organization in the world, and which spares neither effort nor expense to reach the very top notch on every occasion and in overy enterprise.—Petersburg Index-Appeal.

charming and impulsive ladies who told a certain philanthropist that his speech was "too lovely for anything," and if that philanthropist believed there would be nothing improper if his appreciation of their flattery tech the form of an osculatory tribute, why should the Philistines rage and the cynical imagine disagreeable things? Mr. Carnegie is a philanthropist, and everybody knows that philanthropist, and everybody knows the philanthropist, and everybody knows the philanthropist, and imited to prosaic benefactions for the good of men alone. The sentile sex is eitted to whare in the biossings which Mr. Carnegie distributes with so generous abund and, as it also appears, with such litled to share in the biessings which Mr. Carnegie distributes with so generous a hand and, as it also appears with such discriminating ilps. One of the fair Atlanta creatures who was the recipient of Mr. Carnegie's labial benevolence naively remarked after the philanthropic honor had been bestowed upon her: "I wouldn't take anything for it. When I congratulated him upon his speech he hast threw his arms around my neck and kissed me before I could think. Oh, he's a fine fellow!" Some fellow-Caledonia with the instruments of Burns, should have gone with Mr. Carnegie to Atlanta to embalm in verse with the state of philanthropy of the canny Scot. What a masterful benefactor is this man who invades Dixle and starts and inteplidity of Captain Hobson should have some dehonal y counsater. But, of course, he was only practicit gait-round philanthropy—that phase of the which is as old as the hills—the oscubating philanthropy—that phase of the which is as church mice, as well as those who have rehes in abundance, have always regarded as among the most benutiful dutes of mankind and womankind Truly, it may be said of Mr Carnegie that as a heeligate of the Atlantic. "I wouldn't alse anything for it," said the recipient of his kiss. "Is there any young blade of whom the Atlantia lady could have said more? Mr. Carnegie is entitled to first place in the ranks of fervid and aristic kissers. No wonder the fair sex adore him.—Baltimore Sun.
